Breaking news: an exclusive interview with Celeste

Good morning, everyone. This is Ángel, live from the classroom, with today's top story. Yesterday I had an exclusive interview with Celeste, a student here at the university, and she revealed some very interesting details about her life.

First, I asked Celeste how she had got to class that day. She told me that she had come in her own car.

When I asked her what her favorite food was, she revealed that she really liked bowls, and that her favorite at that moment was the burger bowl.

In sports news, I asked her if she had done any exercise that day. She admitted that she hadn't done any yet, but she explained that she usually did it after school.

I also asked her if she was optimistic or pessimistic. She said that she was optimistic, because she liked to find solutions to things.

On the topic of education, I asked her how long she had been learning English. She confessed that she hadn't really been learning, only what they gave them at school.

And now, the big question: I asked her if she would like to be famous. She confirmed that she would, and she said that she wanted to be recognized in sports, at the gym or in swimming.

In travel news, she told me that she was probably going to the beach on her next vacation, because she wanted to visit Mazatlán again.

In soccer news, she revealed that she supported Barcelona, because her boyfriend liked the team.

I also asked her if she had ever visited an English-speaking country. She said that she had been to the United States, including El Paso, Los Angeles, San Diego and Colorado.

And finally, when I asked her what she usually had for breakfast, she said that she usually had oatmeal or yogurt with fruit.

That's all for today. This was Ángel, reporting live. Back to you in the studio!
